architecture

The Country Music Hall of Fame® and Museum's architecture, with its unique design and materials, celebrates country music and Southern culture.

The windows on the front of the building resemble black piano keys.

The giant sweeping arch on the right side of the building portrays a 1950s Cadillac fin.

The cylindrical shape of the Rotunda recalls the water towers and grain silos found in rural settings.

The four disc-shaped tiers on the Rotunda's roof represent the evolution of recording technology, the 78, the vinyl LP, the 45 and the compact disc.

The vertical stone bars along the top of the Rotunda's outside wall form an abstract rendition of a musical arrangement for the Carter Family song "Will the Circle Be Unbroken" the unofficial anthem of the Museum.

The tower rising from the Rotunda is a reminder of the diamond-shaped WSM Radio tower, which was instrumental in the growth of country music.

From overhead, the building resembles the shape of a bass clef.
